

ABSTRACT

A universal programmable remote control detects the presence of a control code of a new apparatus in the user's CE environment. The code or representatives thereof gets communicated to a network-based server. The server maintains a database of codes and distributes the new set of codes to the remote and to other control devices as needed.